Good morning IS 201! This is Zain from 731 this Talk A lot Tuesday on behalf of the SEAL Team.

Ah! The infamous 404 error page. If I had a nickel for each time I ran across that message on my computer, I would be a millionaire. Nevertheless, did you realize that today is 404? That's right today is 404 day. So, let's celebrate its significance by discussing how important internet safety is.

The Internet is nothing more than a world passing notes in a classroom, as Jim Carrey once said. However, those notes can occasionally be rather inappropriate and dangerous, especially for young children. To prevent young kids from coming across some questionable stuff online, the government had to intervene and enact legislation.

But we can't just rely on the government to do all the work. It's up to us to spread knowledge and instruction on the value of internet safety. By working together, we can change things and permanently solve this issue. Safety "doesn't happen by accident," as the proverb says. Let's make every day a 404-free day and make sure we are safe when using the internet.

Thanks for listening and have a Time to Troubleshoot Tuesday
